University Student Orientation

The University Student Orientation at the American University of Health Sciences (AUHS) is a mandatory program for all new students. This comprehensive orientation is designed to equip incoming students with the essential tools, resources, and knowledge to ensure their success both academically and socially at AUHS.

Key Components of the Orientation

Academic Introduction

- Overview of academic programs, expectations, and available resources.
- Introduction to the academic advising system, including guidance on how to effectively utilize academic support services.
- Insights on study skills, time management, academic integrity, and strategies for excelling in coursework.

University Services, Policies, and Procedures

- Familiarization with university services such as Student Services, Financial Aid, Library, IT support, counseling services, and tutoring.
- Clear understanding of AUHS policies, including academic policies, the student code of conduct, and safety protocols.
- Guidance on navigating important administrative processes, such as course registration, financial aid, and accessing student support services.

Student Life and Engagement

- Opportunities to connect with fellow students, faculty, and staff.
- Introduction to student organizations, extracurricular activities, and student leadership opportunities.
- Engagement in fun and interactive activities that promote networking and a sense of community at AUHS.

By attending this orientation, students are better prepared to navigate university life, access important services, and build relationships with peers and faculty.
